Psychotic victims: Risk, compassion and blame in mental health discourses

Rose Moore

OCTOBER 2007

This thesis has been submitted in partial fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of Bachelor of Arts (Hons)
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

While it is not possible here to enumerate all the people who spurred me on and kept me sane during the writing of this thesis, a number of them deserve particular thanks.

First and foremost I would like to thank my supervisor, Jim Martin, whose generosity with his time, encouragement and advice went far beyond the call of duty. Without his unrivalled understanding of when to wave a carrot and when to wield a stick, this thesis would not have reached full term.

I would like to thank Christina Spaccavento for her pragmatic suggestions, her much-needed mockery and her help with proofreading. My mother Meg Davis also deserves thanks for her daily inspirational emails and her ruthless pursuit of split infinitives, commas rampant and the subtle perversions of Polish syntax. Veronika Ebbelaar and Evan Toliopoulos kindly let me use their printer and fed me for the day as well during the last stages of production- I’m heartily grateful for their technical support, emotional support and soup.

Finally, my thanks to Marcin Ojrzynski, who has lived through this tempestuous year with grace and patience, washing my clothes, tolerating derangement, and making me laugh every day despite my travails.