A COURTYARD HOUSE OF ISFAHAN

An inner courtyard along with its sunken space and the surrounding rooms can be seen as a microcosm of the traditional house with the courtyard as the nucleus of the entire family life. The spatial design is such that family activities can take place in the space that is formed by the interaction of two architectural forms, which are the internal courtyard and the family rooms. The relationships between people and space in a traditional house are not only physical but also spiritual, which is why it is often referred to as a "sacred house". The traditional courtyard house is not just a building, but a life space where daily activities, social interactions, and spiritual experiences are intertwined. The design of a courtyard house is not only a reflection of the traditional culture and way of life but also a response to the environmental conditions, such as climate and topography. The courtyard house is an example of how architecture can be a mediator between the natural world and human life, creating a harmonious environment.
