The courtyard is a place where one can retreat from the music store. A guitar can be borrowed from the racks and played in this shaded outdoor space. The surrounding walls help reverberate the music created in this space.

The underground auditorium is a more formal performance space. It contains seating for an audience of 50 and a stage at the bottom. This space is completely enclosed, ideal for any classical or more formal performances.

The front facade is made of corrugated iron and is shaped to emulate the flow of music. The drops in the level of the facade is meant to represent the rhythm of music. The entrance of the building is highlighted with the cut away in the facade.