PARIS 2009 EXHIBITION

Children’s Pavilion

This project emerged from an awareness of a need in Paris for architecture that encompasses the needs of both children and parents. The open space that characterises the Vendome square invites children to run around, but this program seeks to create a safe and fun environment for young children to interact and engage with each other as they discover, create or play, forming important social skills at a young age. Simultaneously, it is a place where parents can gather for a cup of coffee, or to observe the artwork of their children – and engage or contribute in their child’s learning.
