The emergence of Siestaurant in Madrid is a product of collective consciousness. As crucial are delicacies to satisfy Spaniards' palates as is siesta to pacify their strained physicals. The building is contextual to accommodating quintessential Spanish lifestyles and providing a comfort zone in the midst of urban restlessness.

The very organic form of the building is derived from its wing-shaped floor plans, which are intended to separate the restaurant from the siesta centre. The in-between area serves as a primary circulation, connecting the public to private area.
