The reason why swimming pool is chosen as the function of the building is due to the climatic condition in Madrid which is very hot during the summer. By having a public swimming pool, it allows the people to stop by to have a refreshment or relief from the sweat. The name of the building, “Piscina de Madrid”, is Spanish words which simply means the swimming pool of Madrid, where anyone in that city, without any restrictions, are allowed to come and experience the atmosphere of a swimming pool that they never have before. The primary concept of the building itself is to contrast the past and modern (to show contemporary baroque style) as can be seen that the building is not entirely new. Parts of the existing building are still preserved and only the centre piece is transformed into a modern cube. The pattern on the cube itself also based on the traditional pattern of Madrid, which then is converted to a contemporary pattern. Another concept which is based on the interior of the building is the anti-gravity, where most of the functional rooms are not flat on the ground, and instead, these facilities are located in various sizes of floating cubes, supported by light structure. This concept is inspired by the fact that when people swim, their feets naturally do not touch the ground, thus giving a sense of anti-gravity.
